

THE RIOT IN HUDSON CITY

THE LATEST PARTICULARS FROM THE SCENE OF CONFLICT.

Collision Between Irishmen and English

At the west end of Hudson City, on Saturday evening, a number of English miners and a mob of Irishmen fought, and several persons were injured by shooting and otherwise; one and perhaps two whom are fatally wounded. The riot estimated the public house of Horatio Howard, a large contractor, who is blasting out the rock on Grand avenue. He employs about forty English miners, who have been here for some time, and returned home from South Branch at about 7 o'clock on Saturday evening, and found there three men, whose names he subsequently ascertained to be William Noll and William and Patrick, his sons.

They called for drinks, and Mr Howard refused them, as they appeared to be in liquor. The Nolls swore that they would have drinks, and Mr. Howard replied that he guessed he was "boss," and the other fellows went out. Then they challenged any one in the house to fight for them, and Mr. Howard told them away peacefully, but they continued talking about fighting, until finally he and John Cosgrove, one of the miners, got them outside the door, where they attempted to renege, but were kept out. Cosgrove and one of the Nolans then had a fight, and in the process the other two ran away.

In about twenty minutes Mr. Howard saw a large mob coming over the hill, and, remarking that he feared trouble, put up the window shutters and bolted the door. This had barely been done when the mob came up, and some of the ringleaders knocked the house, tearing down the shutters and smashing out the windows.

Mr. Howard did not stop to get his arms and returning from the window, saw the mob, and, remarking that his house was going to be gutted, started out in the direction of the mine, but was followed in another direction, followed by the infuriated mob.

While the rioters were pursuing him, he turned around and fired the remaining shots in his revolver; but was overtake, and beaten and kicked until he was unconscious.

About this time Officers Gallagher, Tahn, Tahn and others arrived on the scene, and the mob now dispersed. The police arrested and took to the City Prison Richard Miner, Joseph Robinson, J. Parra, Wm. Bilett, Wm. Wells, Herbert Huse, Michael Woolcock, Arthur Martin, Douglas Haddad, Wm. Francis, Wm. Bennett, Benjamin Blewett, James J.
